First-

order metaphorical (schema) analyses indicated that participants predominately used "conflict is impotence" schemas. No sex differences emerged in either schemas or in second-order (linguistic) analyses of metaphorical expressions. However, participants reported different schemas, depending on the conflict context, but particularly for the supervisor and departmental member contexts. The supervisor context also exhibited a pattern of linguistic choices, suggesting that male and female respondents objectified their supervisors. Finally, respondents reported greater frequency and intensity of conflicts in family contexts than in any of the work contexts. 7 Amanda Veldorale-Griffin , Carol Anderson Darling , Adaptation to Parental Gender Transition: Stress and Resilience Among Transgender Parents, Archives of Sexual Behavior , 2016 , 45 , 3, 607 6 Jennifer Mize Smith , Colleen Arendt , Jennifer Bezek Lahman , Gina N. Discourse in the Nonprofit Arts Sector, Communication Studies , 2006 , 57 , 1, 25 Abstract: Parental deployment has substantial effects on the family system, among them ambiguity and uncertainty. Youth in military families are especially affected by parental deployment because their coping repertoire is only just developing; the requirements of customer to normal adolescent developmental demands. Focus groups were used to inquire about uncertainty, loss, resilience, and adjustment among book that had a parent deployed, most often to a war zone. The nature of uncertainty and ambiguous loss was explored. Response themes included overall perceptions of uncertainty and loss, boundary ambiguity, changes in mental health, and relationship conflict. These accounts suggest that ambiguous loss is a useful concept for understanding the experiences of these youth and for structuring prevention and intervention efforts. 6 Belinda F.
